Hilda Mleczko continued from Back cover (Now, when were those two photographs taken?) 1945. (Just before you were married?) I'll tell you. I met Henry--oh, that's a long story--you haven't got all day. That's the funniest thing in the book. Finally when I met Henry--he knew me a long time. He'd been (following) me for months. I didn't know. But he wanted to meet this English girl who was wandering through his life. And he got to meet me at a show. The first time that he got to talk to me, he asked me for a date and I said, "Well, I can't come with you because I've got an appointment with a photographer." And I think he thought I was...you know, pushing him off. So just to show him that I really wasn't doing that I said, "Come with me, Henry." And when I had the photograph taken, they took Henry as well, at the same time. But that was our first date, really. I mean, it wasn't a date, because I'd already had an appointment with a photographer. But that was the first time. But that was really funny the way Henry met me. (So you have no regrets that you spent the last almost 45 years here in Cape Breton.) Not one day of it, no. I had a hard time here, of course I did, after the war. We never thought we'd live to see the day that houses would come up here. We were on this hill all by ourselves. Now, I'm watching them. The way they bring up complete sides of houses, and clap them together with--I don't know--staples or glue. I mean, a few days there's a house. But we did it all, all plank by plank, board by board, nail by nail. And it took us longer. (You say "we." Did you participate in building your home?) Oh, yes. Of course I did. I learned how to shingle, and how to saw on the line. And I learned how to paint without covering myself with paint. When I came from England, I didn't know a shingle nail from a 2-by-4, but I'm telling you, I soon learned.... We built on a shoestring, because we didn't have much money. Henry left (England)--we were married in 1945. And he came over in December--back home (to Cape Breton)--December 1945. We were only married a little time. And then I followed him in a war brides' boat, April 1946. So in that time, we Ocean Rentals Ltd.
